great struggle, but when it came to the aid of the German people, he was not so profitable to Germany. He offered his services to the German Government, but the Government directed him to a great deal of war work, in many directions.

Dragged on, entailing heavy loss to the company, and several times he criticized matters strongly to the Kaiser himself. On the matters he criticized, he was given his commendation. Some time ago the German Government decided to make a loan of shipping companies on account of war losses. Ballin protested in straightforward terms that the amount was small, that it was practically useless. He held, too, it should not be a loan but a free gift, otherwise the companies would be saddled with a heavy interest charge after the war, at the very time they would be least able to bear it. The Government took no notice of his views. Later he went several times to Berlin to see the Kaiser and endeavor to persuade him against the unrestricted submarine campaign. Since then the Kaiser and his family have been treated as strangers to one another. Some little time ago Herr Ballin paid a private visit to Island. A gentleman who talked with him on several occasions said that he had the "appearance of a broken man," and that he often expressed himself very pessimistically as to the outcome of the struggle.
