REAL ESTATE AT ALEXANDRIA.

A Cairo correspondent writes:

Five months ago Ls Société d'Extreprises Immobilières et de Trayang, Cairo, made strangements to take over 10% (30,000 pies) of the laud owned by Ls Société Giville des Terrains Gléoptire of Alexandria.

This land has a superfinial ares of about 300,000 pies, and is situated at 1 brahimish (Alexandria) on the sea front. They bought the land in Jane last from Mears, Stagoi and Zervadachi fer P.T. 101 per pie.

The Monitopality has now decided to attend the Alexandria pomeante of the Capture possession. The necessary funds for carrying out this work have already been voted by the Monitopality. One one see at a glance that the value of this property has already been considerably eshunced, and it is estimated that there will be no difficulty in obtaining F.T. 200 to F.T. 200 ber pie for this land. At the present moment there are firm offere on hand for certain parcels at F.T. 150 per pie on parches price. a net profit of P.T. 59 pic, which represents a net profit of P.T. 59 per pic on purchase price.

If the Société d'Estrepries Immobilières et de Travasz were to realiz; today their portion of the property, the sale would net them a clear £18 000, and this on an expenditure of £7,500 made last Jone. As, no doubt the property will be disposed of six a more advantageous figure, a considerably larger profit will result therefrom.

ZIZINIA THRATER

"PRANCILLON."

"Autres tempr, autres mours"; old de Riverolles tale of the Middle âges seems now hardly more antiquated than Dumns' 30 year-old play itself. By so much harve we progressed or—become blast. And, paradoxically, "plus ça change plus o'est la même chose;" there is the usual triangle, this time an isoceelas one, its sides composed of sospicions of husband and wife garried "a outrance" on a very weak basis of infidelity, and the desonement no less laborious than the, Pons Anisords. We hardly care to think how a Dumns of to-day would fare with a piece whose mosepy plot and interminable dialogous denoment no less laborious than the Pons Asinoriou. We headly care to think how a Domas of today would fare with a piece whose meager plot and interminable dialogues are equalled only by its want of plausibility and action. The constant repetition of the main theme by nearly every character soon becomes teclious. There is here and there a redeeming epigram, but on the whole the play offers little opportunity, nor did we think that when produced on Saturday, that little was prished to its utterment possibility. Even Mille Matthe Brandes jie the title 10's did not make price to the utterment possibility. The mild was unfield to its utterment possibility. Even Mille Matthe Brandes jie the title 10's did not make price to the activation of the same possibility. The mild was unfiering, was in a measure responsible. About the part is wordy and influted the same did not be supposed to the imprison, it may well by the popular to the imprison. It may well by the popular comotions genetelly in check; till there was surely room for rather more colour and "abandom" in "Francillon" than Mille Brandes imparted.

Setting saids M. Arand, the present tronner.

"abadon" in "Francillon" than Mile Brandes imparted.
Setting asid M. Aronad, the present trouge is certainly better than Mms Hdding's company, in that they shew confidence and pull well together. On Saturday noon player stod out from amongst the others, so it would be invidious to draw distinctions.

This evening, "L'Espionne" will be given.

regiments: first the Lancers with their band playing, snow-shat inappropriately, very Baglish main, then the guns of the field battery and the mule hattery, and after them detachments of the Egyptian line.

After the long atream has passed away out of sight and the final salute is over, the Khe-dive drives off in his state carriage across the ground, and the great function is over. Within half an hour the crowl has dritted back to its highways and byeways, and the Citadel is once more left to keep solitary watch and ward over the form at its feet.
