JUSTICE AND MORALITY. JUSTICE AND MORALITY.

It is an irody that now that peace is coming Pacifism is the fee of peace just as it was the fee of ware. But it is only fair that some distinction should be drawn between that Pacifism which was in besence treasonable (which loathed the very idea of military victory and did its very best to aren't the issue of the war, which in'tigued for the Stockholm Conference, and for any and every chance of evading victory, which vituperated against the knock-out blow and will-to-win policy, and clutched at any straw and hope to avert the military defeat of Germany), and that he military defeat of Germany), and that ewer Pacifism which has no treasonable newer Pacifism which has no treasonable and water and vet, from the highest and sincerest humanitarian motives now in the highest and sincerest humanitarian motives now suspicion of disreputable Pacifism, which has sought from the very first to mitigate the consequences to Germany of her own that crime, the newer Pacifism' with a clean past takes higher ground, enough to defy the passage of time, and must be followed there. Le and must be followed there. Let us start with one proposition: That on the morrow of the burning of Louvain. of the massacres of Malines. Termonde and Aerschot, of the sinking of the Lusitania of the murder of Edith Cavell, or of any of the outstanding landmarks of German infarms any second large base. any of the outstanding landmarks of Ger-man infamy, no voice could have been raised in the British Isles (for even Paci-fium was prudently sient on the morrows) which would not have been drowned in a roar of incredulous excertation if it had suggested that a Peace of Justice meant a peace in which Justice should fear to be just lest it stimulated the hatred of Ger-man. But a manifest has the conmany. But so amazingly has the con-ception of justice changed during the war-that now the time has come for us to im-pose our just passes. we find that Justice has ceased, in many minds, to connote any retributive—attribute whatseers, and has practically become accepted as a synonym for mercy—Indeed, by further extension, it has come to imply the very negation of justice, as literate mankind hitherto has understood the name and the thing, by the implication that tilk in itself an inferior chic, and a discredited harbraine belong-ing to what is called "the old dispensa-tion." But to most of m, who believe many. But so amazingly has the con ethic, and a discredited barbarism belong-ing to what is called "the old dispensa-tion." But to most of us, who believe that justice is the very foundation of all morality—who cannot see how any new morality can be superior to the old (which was based on justice) until at any rate, the old morality has been vindicated and we can start afresh—to us who believe that the most subtury moral law is that man shall bear the consequence of his own acts, and that there is so hope for human society if the old standards of right are not upheld before we begin to erech higher standards still. this change in the moral values of Justice is bereitlering. Totally was based on justice) until, at any rate values of Justice is bewildering. Totally rejecting the though the retributive jus-ice is immoral, and that a "Higher" mo-rality favours the indulgence of oblivious unrepented wrongdoing, we believe that any lenical peace to Germany would imply end the reign of justice as we knew it and inaugurate a new ern of muldide in morality which would leave us without morality which would leave us without any clear standards of right and wrong at all. The "Higher" morality may be the "Newer," but we do not see that it would be the better or the truer. And we want to know how that change in moral values has come about, and what guarantee there is that the new conception of justice is any better than the old.

The change is the dide at future, it to be

The change in the idea of justice is to be The change in the idea of justice is to be attributed in a large measure surely, to what is incontrovertibly a moral defect and not a sign of superior morality at all: to a moral indignation that is so easily fatigued that it cannot "stay the course" of its moral resentment until justice is done. The essential thing about the Lustiania (to we can word weekly as, a whole for the use one word merely as a symbol for the use one word merely as a symbol for the million words that would still not exhaust the catalogue of German infamy) is not that it happened. The sexplial fact about the 17500 murdeed merchant seams is not that their murders were spread over quite a long period but that they were murder-ed. We could point to several people, now and ARABAS Law Events and the second of the control of the make the control of the c upholding the new morality of a justice too weak to be just, whose moral indignatoo weak to be just whose moral indigna-dion at those crime was healthly express-ed in the terms of that old morality which, in 1914, let u remember, had to be defend-ed and upheld, and not abandoned and thrown on the scrapheap. In fact, the main difference between us and them, be-reeen the old and the new, is that we re-member these things viridly and not pale-je, and they forget—And just as their moral semibilities have not been robust to the contract of them to moral advance at all, but a distinct retro-gression and a definite backsliding upon even the old standards. And we believe it is not new moral trength, but merely old-fashionaed moral cowardice, which calls out that if the Ger-mans are forced to accept these terms they will then be entitled to nourish a ferrer ment of the total sum of wrong that is ir-reparable, and yet even that much may not be asked, why trouble about any mo-rality whatever, new or old? In short, if what Germany has done matters so little that we are practically asked to forget all about it, what on earth does it matter what we do to Germany?
